No need to go scrambling to distant rooms for table and kitchen linen. Have your linen right at hand, in this Whitehall Linen Tray and Drawer unit. Keeps linen clean, neat, and convenient. May also be used for cups, saucers, and silverware.

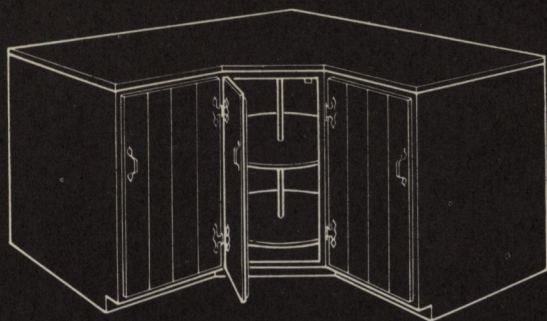

If you entertain a lot, or if you have small youngsters, there always are beverage bottles around. To keep bottles from cluttering closets and hallways Whitehall offers this convenient Beverage Tray unit. Neat storage for all size bottles.

Corners always are a problem when decorating, but not with Whitehall cabinets. These roomy corner cabinets hold a lot of groceries, or pots and pans, on two revolving shelves. Everything is always up front, within easy reach. The shelves and revolving mechanism are of steel.

These handy, rugged plastic tote trays may be carried anywhere you need them. Ideal for storing potatoes, onions, kitchen utensils, bags of flour, sugar, and other bulky items. Or, leave one empty for use as a dishpan.

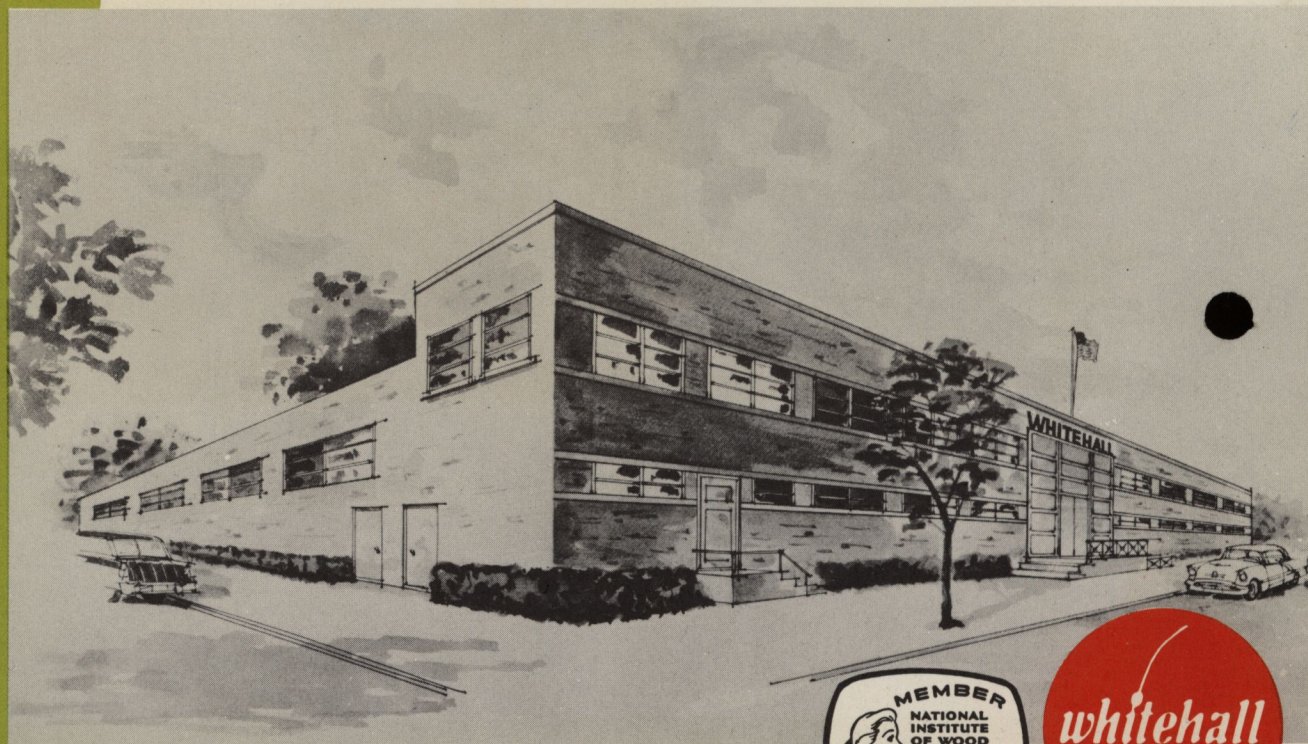

It was 1687 when a group of enterprising settlers cleared away a space in Rockaway Swamp, on the southern Long Island coastline, and built and operated what turned out to be a highly successful grist mill. Sixty-five years later, in 1752, East Rockaway saw the construction of a shipyard; the community quickly gained distinction as a shipbuilding center and port. By the mid 1800s schooners were leaving East Rockaway for Spain, Portugal, and other points, carrying cargos of flour, board, and beeswax.

Today in East Rockaway, the same painstaking skills that were once employed building rugged little coastal brigatines and ocean going sailing ships are employed making America's most envied kitchen cabinets...Whitehall. The pride of workmanship, the "feel" for wood that marked the early settlers are evident in each cabinet, each unit, that rolls off the Whitehall assembly line. Just as the early Long Islanders went to East Rockaway for fine ships, today Americans from coast to coast "go" to East Rockaway—to Whitehall—when they want fine kitchen cabinets. Whitehall makes quality cabinets for beautiful kitchens...cabinets we are proud to make, cabinets you will be proud to have.
